THUESDAY, P. M.

The A gentleman from Troy has just called our attention to an article in this department of our paper, published a few days since, in relation to the Troy Bridge and the Troy and Schenectady Railroad, which, he informs us, is in all respects unjust, and in some of its statements quite wide of the mark. We have only to say that the paragraph in question would never have been permitted to appear in The Tribune had our Money and Commercial Reporter submitted it for approval. It was all wrong.

there never can be a good cause for having poor bread. A chemical certainty is just as sure never to mis as a mathematical certainty; and if the bread be not light, spongy and sweet—if, in a word, it be not perfect, it is because the proportion of the Yeast and Salieratus are not exactly right. The common mode of mising dough is by the slow process of vinous fermentation; the new mode is by almost instantaneous effervescence. You may make it, and bake it, and have it on the table, too, in thirty minutes, and eat it hot or cold, as you like, without danger to your health.
